British flag—wreckedness worse by far than was over found on board a slave. Only fancy 1,000 or 1,200 families could be taken care of in a small vessel for 18 or 20 days, with no room, no food, and little or no fuel for the stoves. There is no medical man to attend to their wants when sick, and but a limited stock of medicine on board. I lost seven pilgrims in about 10 days, and I firmly believe that prompt medical treatment by a doctor would have saved them all. Of course, if these wretched beings die en route to Mecca, their eternal happiness is assured, so that they generally seem glad to give up the ghost and fly to the realms of joy. I wish you could have seen some of our little scenes of excitement. You must understand that my "baton" consisted of Turcomans, Arabo-Persians, and Belucians. They all came on board armed to the teeth, but, of course, I had all their weapons taken charge of by my officers and looked up in safety. I mean all the weapons we saw. They took up their quarters in any part of the ship, and from the moment of embarkation at the Port of Callao, the Captain and his officers were on duty. One day I had occasion to give orders for the removal of some luggage, which I found placed in the steering gear, and which, of course, interfered with the navigation of my vessel. I was informed by the Officers that the owners of this luggage refused to shift it, and on my insisting on obedience to my orders, I found about me 150 out-throat Arabs, all armed and prepared to resist my authority. Discretion, under the better part of me, induced me to give up the idea of removing the luggage.
